Andrew Wormer is a contributing editor to "Fine Homebuilding" magazine and the author of "The Builder’s Book of Bathrooms" (The Taunton Press) and "The Bathroom Idea Book" (The Taunton Press). An experienced builder and bathroom remodeler, Andrew lives in Ferrisburgh, Vermont.Clayton DeKorne worked alongside his tradesman father until he became a full carpenter at age 17. Over the next decade, he advanced from lead carpenter to trim contractor before taking a position as senior editor at the Journal of Light Construction and later as founding editor of Tools of the Trade. He lives in Burlington, Vermont.

I’m remodeling my home and need to do everything, from building built in bookcases and kitchen units, to finish work like baseboards. I also come at this with zero expertise as a carpenter, but I want to achieve professional results. Quite a challenge! I found this book gave me the confidence to try my hand at each activity, and it gave me the information I needed.One complaint, I’ve bought a couple of other books (insulate and weatherize, remodeling a basement) in this series and am a big fan generally. This was slightly worse than some of the others. It contains all the information you will need, but does not take the time to teach. Rather, the reader will have to pace themself, and will find themselves going back to re-read the relevant parts many times. Perhaps I’m asking too much, or perhaps some of the other books in this series have just gone that extra mile without needing to.Still a good book, but not as easy to read as some of the others in the series.

I purchase this book to get some ideas, this book goes into detail from wood selection to all types of valuable information, on all types of products. For it would work well for beginners, as some of the info is a bit redundant for mid to experienced carpenters. Highly Recommend for beginners.
