Customer Reviews

A gang of mice learns to mix colors and to count; the "naive charm and exuberance" of Walsh's cut-paper art helped earn Mouse Paint a spot among PW's Best Books of 1989. Ages 2-6; 4-8.

great book for introducing children to the science of color

We have the lap size board book. The concept is good, but the blue and purple are very hard to distinguish. In some spots the pictures show so little of the colors being mixed that I think the point is lost on young children. These two flaws defeat the purpose of an otherwise cute story. I'd look for this at the library but pass on it as a permanent addition to the home collection.

This is a great book and a nice teaching tool to help children learn about primary color mixing.

I love this book for teaching color mixing to first graders. They love to pull it off my shelf and read it during free time. Great book.

We originally bought this book because we love lap-sized board books for story time. Unfortunately, we had to return the book as it arrived damaged, with a few pages bent. While we still love the concept of the book for teaching color mixing and the story is cute, we decided not to buy it again as the colors are quite muted.

Arrived as described.

Used this story for an art lesson. LOVE IT!

I have a master's in education, and when I had my own kids, I started looking for good books that would be read over and over. This book teaches about color mixing through mice. I am glad that I bought the lap-size edition so that all the kids can see. It was well worth the extra money spent. If you buy 25.00 worth of eligible books with , you get free shipping too. I am pleased with the book, durability, cost, and shipping of this book.
