Laurie Wolf was the food editor for Mademoiselle before becoming the food editor for Child magazine for eighteen years. An accomplished food stylist, she has had work featured in Vogue, New York, Self, Glamour, Parents, and more. The author of Portland, Oregon ChefÃ¢â ¬â„¢s Table and Food LoversÃ¢â ¬â„¢ Guide to Portland, Oregon (Globe Pequot), she lives in Portland with her husband, photographer Bruce Wolf.

I purchased this book for a trip we were making to Seattle. Sadly, I have to say it ended up on the car floor after day 2 because the restaurants we chose out of it weren’t as good as hyped up. One restaurant in particular that I will not name here, was not only expensive (and we LOVE expensive restaurants), but it was full of itself and didn’t deliver. That was when we tossed the book and took other measures for finding places to eat.My suggestions are this...before going on vacation, peruse Tripadvisor and Yelp. We find Tripadvisor to be the most accurate. Also...ask the locals. I have never had a local steer me wrong when it comes to a restaurant.

Not a lot of food visuals, but the information is still VERY current.

We went to several of the restaurants listed in this book and they did not let us down. Delicious!

I gave this to a friend who just moved to Seattle area. She says she loves it.

The book doesn’t have a rating for each restaurant, etc. The author said "If you hear Seattleites talking about the East side they are referring to the suburbs just east of Seattle." Actually, there are several cities in the "East side" and in my opinion they are not the suburbs of Seattle. One is the City of Bellevue that has vibrant upscale downtown with places such as Neiman Marcus, Gucci, Prada, Hermes, etc. It has several large companies located in the area and numerous gourmet cuisine restaurants, 5 star hotels and an excellent shopping mall. There is the city of Redmond that has several companies such as Microsoft, and the City of Kirkland that has waterfront restaurants, Spa hotels and is a beautiful place to visit. They are NOT suburbs!
