Herbert George Wells (21 September 1866 Ã¢â ¬â œ 13 August 1946) was an English author now best known for his science-fiction novels, such as "The Time Machine", "The First Men in the Moon" and "The Invisible Man".

Classics Illustrated are the best in literary adaptation of the great works of literature. And the fantasy classics seem to lend themselves best to the medium. This edition has been in print for over 50 years. I aught to know. That’s how long ago I got my first copy.

The Time Machine has always been open to one’s imagination. Why? Because Wells did not give any details on what the machine really looked like. So whenever it was turned into a comic, TV show, or movie, the crew or artist or author would decide on their own what it would look like or act like.So while the comic book pretty much follows the story it takes it own view, its own ideas about what the machine, the landscape, the Eloi, and the Morlocks. Always a joy when I find another vision or point of view when it comes to his great work.

This is a story that has intrigued readers for several generations, and will continue to do so. The great imaginative story is brought to life for young readers through the Classics Illustrated, to whet their appetites. Later it will hopefully draw them to read the full version and really experience the characters and situation in wonderful depth.

A Great Book Classic!

OK, but not the best retelling I've seen.

Good reprint of a classic.
