Synopsis

(Schott). In 1759 Leopold Mozart compiled a notebook of exercises for his daughter Nannerl. The notebook was also used by young Wolfgang, who composed his own pieces into the empty pages. This edition contains all of Leopold’s and Wolfgang’s compositions from the collection. "Since this is music chosen by a professional musician father for his daughter’s successful career, each piece introduces a new and different technique with no time wasted in between. In terms of difficulty, the music is consistently progressive along with key signature, from simple to advanced...The editor shows great understanding of characteristics of the period through dynamics, ornamentation and phrasings. Most of all, pieces are not too long for younger students, so they can learn and enjoy performing quickly. The catching melody could especially motivate students. Also, well-organized page and spacing between lines are another plus for students."-- American Music Teacher

Very clear pages; there is good contrast between the black of the notes and the white of the page. The notes are also big enough that I can see them easily. It’s not spiral bound, so I use a paper clip or clothespin to keep it open on the music stand.As far as the difficulty level of the music goes, It goes from beginner-intermediate to intermediate; however, some of the easier pieces are actually located toward the end. I personally might have preferred that it was organized strictly from easier to harder, but as long as you’re willing to just skim you should be able to quickly identify the easier pieces.

My kid’s piano teacher is very happy with this edition

I purchased this book to view some of the first musical notation Nannerl and Wolfgang may have used themselves, and to get a glimpse into the mind of Leopold, their father, as a teacher. It starts with very simple pieces and moves to harder pieces. Fun to play as well.
