Customer Reviews

This unique series uses illustrated high-interest stories to get your students thinking like real editors! Each book will improve students' language mechanics significantly and--equally important--improve academic performance! Easy to teach and a lot more fun than traditional grammar drills.

I chose this when homeschooling, because what the students are required to do is similar to what they do on achievement tests, ACT tests or CLEP tests. Basically, a scenario is presented followed by an article that was hypothetically written about that scenario. The students then pick out errors, whether grammatical, spelling, content or just misleading in the way it is written. The back of the book will tell you what kind of error it is (ending with preposition, run-on, etc.) Then the student can re-write the article if you desire. Very good!

Upon receiving this book, I noted that lessons 1 through 22 had been torn from the book. Ultimately, this renders this book completely useless to me. I also noted that nearly all of the remaining pages in this book had large areas of pencil graffiti. I am sooo disappointed with this purchase. I have never been moved to write a review before, but felt the need to following this purchase.

This book is excellent for teaching good writing skills by having the students find grammar/content/punctuation mistakes in interesting articles. I am amazed at how well this works with my kids... Learning abounds!

Great tool for teaching writing. The articles and examples certainly help my son to learn correct punctuation, spelling, and usage.

The Editor in Chief series is a great 'warm-up' to assignment editing and shows me what the students need to review

I purchased the 4 level set, B1, B2, C1 & C2 from The Critical Thinking Co. This is not the first time I have purchased one of their products. I find they tend to deliver what they promise, and this program is no exception.I am very pleased with this software. It does teach editing skills and grammar. It also teachs attention to detail and perseverance. Further, most of the material the students edit is educational. All of it is entertaining.I can't recommend this program highly enough. The software is a particularly good investment, because it can be used an infinite number of times.

The entire Editor in Chief series is excellent. Often, even students who don't like studying grammar enjoy the EIC editing challenges. They are short and the number of errors in a passage is noted in advance, so that students know when to stop or to keep searching. I would recommend this series for either homeschooled or in-school students to complement any other curriculum. It is indeed one of the Critical Thinking Company's best publications.

This program is challenging, does require thought, and does exactly what it claims.
