Synopsis

In the minds of most Albertans, ""Northern Alberta"" begins just beyond the city limits of Edmonton, the provincial capital. While most Albertans are familiar with Edmonton, northern Alberta remains unknown to many residents of the southern part of the province. Full of history, bursting with contemporary energy and offering an expanse of the great outdoors, northern Alberta is a very special part of an exceptional province.

Andrew Bradley was born in Melbourne, Australia, in 1962. An avid outdoorsman and world traveller, Andrew has spent time in Toronto, Los Angeles and New York. He has lived and worked in his adopted province, Alberta, since 1996. A self-taught photographer, Andrew is also a pilot with an eye for aerial views. Born in Montreal, writer and photographer Jennifer Groundwater moved to Banff, Alberta, in 1993 for one summer. She fell so in love with the Rockies that she now makes her home in Canmore, Alberta, where she enjoys the outdoor lifestyle to the full with her husband, son, dog and cat. She has worked extensively in the tourism industry in Banff and Canmore, and has travelled extensively throughout Canada and the world.
