Elizabeth A. Minbiole, CPA, MBA, is an associate professor at Northwood University in Midland, Michigan,where she teaches accounting principles, cost accounting, and financial statement analysis; as well as managerial accounting in the Richard DeVos Graduate School of Management.

Excellent summaries of the Accounting Principles that are written in plain English, and not dry textbook style writing. Easy reading which makes it easier to understand the principles. I have a Bachelor’s in Accounting and I used this book as a refresher for a State Civil Service exam. Excellent review material without having to look at my old textbooks. This book kept my interest, as much as Accounting Principles can! I did very well on the exam too ... :)I think this would benefit someone wanting to learn or is struggling to learn accounting. Very helpful.

for the second half of my accounting principles class this may help me get my grade up! should have looked for this first!

This book is handy to get another version of accounting knowledge. I use this to clarify my college homework.

Wow, accounting, what a thrilling weekend of reading. As far as prep guides go, I find these cliffsquick books to be excellent. I read this book as well as the accounting I book from the same series. I have never had any exposure to accounting, and this book brings you up to speed quickly. Of course, this is the more advanced in the series so you may consider not starting here if you’re new. It’s well written and includes some visual aids that really help.Happy reading

This book is designed to refresh the memory of someone who already has a good understanding of all topics. It does not, however, clarify or re-teach the concepts. This book has very limited educational value.

I found it very helpful for a masters level financial analysis course. Very concise and well organized. I would recommend to anyone who needs a supplement for class projects and exams.

Good notes.

I purchased this book for my business library. Very concise and helps to cover the basics of accounting.
