Note that bike routes are just routes picked by "experienced cyclists". The map does not show actual bike lanes on streets! For example, it doesn't show any bike path on 15th street NW. Since I wanted a map of bike lanes, I found this map very disappointing but it may have gold scenic routes outside the city.

It's fine for its intended use. I was hoping for something that covered the whole metro DC area, out to suburbs a number of miles out. The description does not tell specifically what area the map covers. Note this, if you're wondering: The area covered by the map is basically what's within I-495 plus a little bit outside the beltway.

This map has a comprehensive list of bicycle routes across the region. Its very useful to see all the rides you can do and how to reach to the great sights.

This is a big clear map. The only downside is that at times it’s a little TOO big. The map covers a lot of area outside of DC proper and makes it occasionally difficult to pinpoint exact locations if you only care about the more central areas of DC.

This map is extremely comprehensive. One side covers all major and minor roads in the Annapolis, D.C. Fredrick, and Virginia area and highlights roads that are very good for biking (large shoulders, smooth pavement). The other side has D.C. and there is still one more blowup of the heart of downtown. It is very detailed, has all roads clearly labeled, and shows the good bike paths, trails, and designated roads and bikeways in the city. If you want a map of D.C. for anything related to driving or biking, or looking for metros stops, this is the map to get. It is well worth the price ($9).
