Synopsis

I was 48, overweight, and disabled, but I went on a three-month solo trip from one end of New Zealand to the other. This is a story of the major and minor mishaps of disabled travel. It is a tale of the wonders of New Zealand. And above all else, it is a testimonial to the kindliness and great consideration of the people I met there.

Meredith Minter Dixon spends most of her time in cyberspace, conducting free online Latin classes on LatinStudy. She lives in West Virginia with her husband Jim and a clowder of cats. She has previously published the Maconiana series, a six-volume social history of student life at a small woman’s college in Virginia.

I decided to procure this free e book, looking forward to a happy read about New Zealand. This woman is obviously blessed with an independent spirit and with her rather large weight problem and many health problems I am in awe of her attempting this trip.However I am very disappointed with the accommodations she chose. I thought I was going to be reading about someone who met and mingled with young and old travellers in Backpackers and had a lot of fun but most of the travelogue was a series of complaints about the beds, the lack of room, and her many health problems. I am sorry she didn’t find it comfortable in the many places she stayed but as the saying goes..."you get what you pay for". The comment re the lack of a heater in the Wellington "motel" intrigued me.....the YHA’s are definitely not motels in the any country in my experience.I didn’t get the feeling that she really enjoyed her trip and the long descriptions of how she managed her bags were tedious. In the end I resorted to skim reading to see if the tone changed, but alas it didn't. To do her justice I have reread the skimmed pages and my opinion is unchanged. The book needs editing .....maybe if she wrote it in Latin it would be more concise!
