Synopsis

About the author:Joseph LeConte (1823 Ã¢â ¬â œ 1901) was a physician, geologist, professor at the University of California, Berkeley and early California conservationist.From inside the book:About the first week before the end of the First Session of the University of California, several young men, students of the University, invited me to join them in a Camping party for the Yosemite and the High Sierra. The party was to go in regular pioneer style, cooking their own provisions, and sleeping under the open sky whenever a convenient place was found; each man was to bestride his own horse, carry his own bedding behind his saddle, and his clothing, with the exception of one change of underwear, on his back.
