Grade 9 UpÃ¢â ¬â •Following an introduction to the subject, various articles, primary sources, speeches, and other documents provide perspectives on how this tragedy unfolded, who was affected, and what was done to either stop the genocide or allow it flourish. Students will find a wealth of information on what actually happened during this dark time in Rwanda, as well as how the genocide was treated by the international community and how people and organizations caught up in the event responded. Personal narratives, including those from survivors, offer a unique and troubling account of the events. Additionally, official statements, as well as conflicting accounts of various responses from both governmental and religious organizations, allow readers to understand how the genocide was handled by those in Africa and abroad. Color photographs, many quite graphic, further illustrate the atrocities committed against the Tutsi people. An informative addition to any collection.Ã¢â ¬â •Carol Fazioli, Gwynedd-Mercy College, Gwynedd Valley, PA (c) Copyright 2011.
