Customer Reviews

The star rating refers not to the decision -- because reviewing a court decision on seems pretty silly -- but to the product being sold: a scan of a slip opinion (the court's first release of a decision before it is printed in an official report) that can be downloaded for free from the Supreme Court's website. It can also be read for free on any number of sites, including Cornell University's. What's the point of charging people for a public document that the public can find for free with minimal effort? One star for encouraging people to waste their money.
