Very interesting

It sounds nice but my issue with with the word "variety". "Essential Oil, Lavender Variety", "Essential Oil, Cedarwood Variety", etc. Each subspecies has a distinct aroma, and thus, if you want your readers to smell what you smell, you need to give specific oil names (Latin names preferably).So this could be for someone who knows what type of aroma they like/can handle, but not for someone new to essential oils. (And "musk" is almost always synthetic unless you want to go very high price or use animal musk glands).
